Stouck reminds us with discerning grace that history arises from lives that are affected by multiple occurrence, agency, Arthur Erickson: An Architects Life. The following chapters of the book represent what are most certainly the triumphs of his early career, the wonderful houses in West Vancouver and its environs for which he would become known, culminating to his plan and execution of the Simon Fraser University, completed with his partner Geoff Massey in This Week's Flyers.

One entrancing example, entrancing because of its punning and unexpectedness, is the entirely Modernist yet completely Baroque staircase leading from the roadway entrance up to the main mall level at Simon Fraser University. Four photographs of that reconfiguring of the physical and pedagogical fabric of European and North American university education atop the unlikely acropolis of Burnaby Mountain appear in the photo insert that accompanies the book.
