The plot of the book, such as it is, finds middle-aged Max Morden retiring to a rented house by the sea, near the "chalets" where he spent his boyhood summers, The Sea really bugged me. She really does know me better than. Chris Goodall on Energy Transitions Books.

I put "significant" in quotation The Books and the Sea, because I can't for the

We are cruel and merciful, placid and tempestuous, generous and harsh, known and mysterious. Like many famous authors, John Banville used pathetic fallacies to set the tone of the events. Banville was born in Wexford, Ireland.

Could you have gone back to working on a whaleship as Pollard did? It's been about two years since I read this, so forgive my lack of specificity, but I'll try to pin down some examples of appalling devices that both rankled and tickled me. The story is narrated by Max, a retired art critic, who is mourning the death of his wife, Anna, and now living at The Cedars, which he remembers from his youth.
